

Lost and Found

Listen to the story of the birds' plight
When during a very stormy night
The tree in which they built their nest
Was blown over with all the rest.

Father and mother bird, this happy pair
Had selected this spot with great care.
They lost their home where it was so warm
All because of this severe storm.

The father bird managed to flee
But mother bird was hit by the falling tree.
Yes, I am so sad to tell
That she hurt herself as she fell.

Unfortunately she broke her wing
Now no longer did she sing.
Hubby bird did not only loose his house
But neither could he find his spouse.

Next morning mother bird was found by a boy.
Oh, such enormous gladness and joy.
He patched up her broken wing.
In thankfulness she began again to sing.

SpindleWorks

A short story by Leo Schoof, Kelmscott, Western Australia

Page 2 of 2

He respected God's little creature
As taught by his school teacher.
A week later he let her fly
And guess who just passed by?

Both birds were now reunited.
And they were ever so excited.
The boy just stood there as spectator.
As together they sang to their Creator.

Leo Schoof
November 2006

itschoof@iinet.net.au